Electromagnetically induced transparency (EIT) and lasing without population inversion

Quantum interference allows counter-intuitive processes such as lasing without population inversion, which we have used to produce a novel and efficient source of coherent blue light from a rubidium vapour. We have investigated the process both experimentally and theoretically, using a semiclassical dressed-state approach, finding new insights into the many mysterious effects observed.